WHO THREW THE MOUSE IN MAGGIES CREAM

Have you ever heard the story of the poor little mouse that got drowned in the cream? It is a tragic story and a story of mystery too, for no one will ever know how it got into the cream.

The farmer's wife, who cut off all the tails of her mice with the carving knife says that the jar in which the cream was kept was always covered with a heavy plate. Perhaps the poor little mouse lifted the lid to peek in while on its foraging expeditions, slipped on the edge of the jar and fell in. Or perhaps it jumped in, thinking it could eat all the cream, and drowned in the attempt. No one will ever know, but the obituary of the little mouse was written on a cream check and read, "Graded No. 2 (mouse)".

What a shock it must have been to the creamery man to see the little mouse there floating in all that cream? He couldn't taste it. It wasn't fit for him to taste. True, it smelled sweet though. Probably go "special" but all he could do was to grade it No. 2, the lowest, to make sure his company would get a square deal. But the mouse must be taken out of the cream so. "That he did". Now without the mouse it was as good as any other cream. What was the sense of putting it in the churn to make No. 1 butter. None at all, so in with the No. 1 for it went.

Another unsolved mystery of the story and perhaps the most intriguing is why the creamery man was willing to pay 36½¢ per lb B F for cream that he considered unfit to taste? He surely didn't buy it to throw it out. Was it a case of what is one man's meat is another man's poison, in reverse?

Next Saturday when the farmer's wife took her cream to the creamery she got her weekly supply of butter at the same time. The creamery man always let her have it at reduced price. Next day was Sunday and the farmer's wife had company. Imagine her horror when she thought she spied a little grey hair in the butter on the dinner table. Was it a hair from her poor little mouse or just some other farmer's wife's mouse? She will never know!

Canadian Pacific Spitfires Take Toll of Hun 'Planes

The two Spitfires presented to the Royal Canadian Air Force overseas by officers and employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway from the proceeds of their novel Golden Aircraft Fund have had "very remarkable careers", according to the R.C.A.F. News Service. Pilots flying them have shot down at least seven Hun 'planes, damaged nine and chalked up two probables, and, in addition, Canadian Pacific 1 and 2 were the "personal" ships of two Canadian aces when they won the Distinguished Flying Cross.

The two fighter 'planes, pictured on the upper right of the layout above, were paid for by the sale of old gold donated from all over the Canadian Pacific to a fund originated by Miss Gladys Gervilland (upper left), of the treasury department in Montreal, who is shown rolling the sinews of war out of the barrel and into a model C.P.R. train.

The pilots who "got their guns" while flying the C.P.R. Spitfires are Squadron Leader D. G. (Bud) Malloy, D.F.C., of Halifax (left), who made 40 sweeps with Canadian Pacific 1; and Flight Lieutenant G. B. (Scotty) Murray, D.F.C., also of Halifax, who destroyed one enemy aircraft, damaged four and had two probables in 27 sweeps with Canadian Pacific 1.

CHAPTER XI.

TOGETHER Morgan and Rosita slipped out of the warehouse shadows. Hardly had they placed themselves on the opposite side of the street when they heard approaching footsteps, and then the striking of a match as another cigarette was lighted. Morgan, lifting himself on tiptoe, saw the dim figure of Rojas beside the rumphoard of the car. The automobile glided around and touched his pistol to Rojas' side. "Arriba, Capitán," he said softly.

"Rojas whirled, blinking in his surprise. "Morgan!" he exclaimed.

"Not so loud, señor," cautioned Morgan. "We want a word with you—"

"You are under arrest, Morgan. Put that gun away and make no effort to raise his hands.

"Rojas, you are hunting the wrong people. Listen—"

The captain stepped back quickly and his hand flew toward the holster weapon he held at his waist. "Sanchez! Pedro! Rojas!"

rang out into the night with the carrying qualities of a struck gong. "Hurry! Morgan is here! Before the police come! Morgan is here! Before the police come! Morgan is here! Before the police come!"

Morgan's arm rose and fell crashing the butt of the automatic down on Rojas' head. He crowded the falling figure against the car and eased the stunned man to the ground.

"Rosita!" he cried. "Start the car and get out of here! Before the police come! Morgan is here! Before the police come! Morgan is here! Before the police come!"

The girl darted forward to jerk open the car door. Morgan gathered Rojas in his arms; the turning starter whirled the motor into life and Morgan, throwing himself over the unconscious captain into the rear seat, heard gears clash; the car jolted into motion with an abruptness that startled Morgan and his burden into a heap on the cushions.

ROSITA gripped the steering wheel more tightly and the crescendo of the motor increased as her foot flattened the accelerator against the floorboard. The police who blocked the exit jumped hastily to avoid the hurtling vehicle.

"Keep going, señorita!" Morgan called. "They'll be after us as soon as they can round up another car."

There was no need to halt for Morgan to take the wheel. Rosita Velasquez was handling the speeding car with all the dexterity Morgan himself could have commanded, and her superior knowledge of the streets enabled them to keep up the chase and quickly put the city behind them.

In his corner of the tonneau Rojas straightened, grunted under his breath and ingested the bump on his head. He eyed Morgan, the girl, the gun resting on Morgan's knee, then gazed at the night-drummed countryside blurring past the window of the car.

"Are you mad, señor Morgan?" he asked. "This is kidnapping."

"You force us to take these desperate measures, captain. We want to prove to you that you should be on our side instead of Guillermo's. Guillermo is the spy whose activities brought me to Buenos Aires. It was he who ordered Velasquez and Diaz killed."

"I hope you speak the truth, señor," Rojas smiled. "I would like to believe that the confidence and co-operation we showed one another was not misplaced on my part."

Rosita turned the car off the highway, entering an empty lane that threaded through a grove of trees. Where the growth was thickest, the girl applied the brakes, and in that secluded spot Chris Morgan revealed the details of the tangle that had commenced when the American had first observed the faintly smudged surface of what should have been an immaculate and sparkling glass.

CAPTAIN ROJAS heard him through, and was silent for a long moment. "That is a rather fantastic tale, señor Morgan," he said at length. "I regret that I cannot accept it."

Into the hotel there is a long chance that we can put the skids under Guillermo."

The girl glanced doubtfully toward the policeman. "But—Capt. Rojas—" "I shall handle Rojas," Morgan said briefly. "Wait until I have a look into the rumble seat."

Rosita took the automatic while Morgan left the car and opened the baggage compartment. He found a section of rope long enough to bind the arms of Rojas securely.

Rojas made no physical protest as his hands were tied behind his back. "I shall not forget this indignity, señor," he promised darkly.

"Sorry, captain," Morgan apologized. "But I cannot trust you not to create a disturbance when we return to Buenos Aires, or while we are in the hotel."

The knots lightened. Morgan took his handkerchief and fashioned a gag to place over Rojas' mouth and jaw.

Back on the highway, Rosita headed the car toward the lights of the distant city. Because the police would be on the lookout for Rojas' car, she sought the darker streets as soon as possible, and worked her way toward the Casa Grande by a circuitous route. Finally she swerved the car to the curb and stopped.

They remained in the car until the street was empty of pedestrians in both directions. Then Morgan hustled Rojas toward the sidewalk and, taking his captive's arm, forced him to walk with them to the corner and into the service driveway of the Casa Grande.

All the doors along the platform of the hotel were closed. Rosita took the keys from Morgan, unlocked one particular door, then nodded her head in signal that the hall within was temporarily deserted.

"Sit at the fourth floor," Morgan whispered, as he and Rojas stopped with the girl into the waiting elevator.

"Your room is on the fifth floor," said Rosita.

"We are calling on Guillermo," said Morgan, closing the door of the elevator. "Say a little prayer, señorita, that Don Felix is home and that he has not yet heard that we have been routed from the wool warehouse."

(To Be Continued)

Next week Morgan exposes Guillermo's secret.

Commentaries for military training films are here, headed with aid of the electric telecord machine by Cpl. Irene Merpaw of the C.W.A.C.

Cpl. Irene Merpaw of Regina, Sask., is convinced that here is one of the most interesting jobs in the Canadian Women's Army Corps.

As an expert, Cpl. Merpaw has been employed as a 36mm projector in the Film Branch of the Directorate of Military Training in Ottawa, during the past five months.

The experience has proved a success, and thus a new field of endeavour is opened to the Canadian Women's Army Corps.

This work involves the projection of all new training films gathered from member countries of the United Nations, at previews held in Ottawa for staff officers to select subjects suitable for Canadian training needs.

In addition, Cpl. Merpaw is responsible for the care of a large library which contains thousands of feet of film on a variety of training subjects.

Barrage Balloons In Britain Get

Thorough Overhauling Every Day

Britain's barrage balloons are moored for the duration, and so are their crews, who must be on watch 24 hours a day, says "Britain." Every morning the cable must be oiled and there is a general checking up. The which must be cleaned and started up, and the "purity test" must be made with a meter which registers the amount of oxygen mixed with the gas.

Too much oxygen can cause a dangerous explosion. The fabric must be carefully examined for punctures, and any holes must be mended.

Picket duty is very important, for a balloon might suddenly leave its moorings and go up. Members of the Women's Auxiliary Air Force are gradually taking over this job, except on island sites where the balloons are water-borne. A full crew consists of sixteen W.A.A.F.s but there must never be fewer than nine on duty.

SELECTED RECIPES

HOMB-BAKED BEANS

1 pound dried navy beans
1 teaspoon dry mustard
1 teaspoon pepper

1/2 cup Bee Hive Corn Syrup
1/2 peeled large onion
3/4 pound salt pork

1/2 tablespoon salt in 1/2 cup boiling water

Look over and wash the beans; cover with cold water and let stand overnight. Drain. Cover with fresh cold water, bring to boil and simmer 3/4 hour. Drain and turn into bean pot. Sprinkle with the mustard and pepper, drizzle with the corn syrup and add the onion, cut-up salt pork and boiling water to cover. Cover and bake in slow oven, 300 degrees F., for two hours. Pour the salt and the 1/2 cup boiling water over the beans; complete the baking (about 3 hours longer). During baking, add water as necessary to keep the beans moist; uncover toward end of baking to allow the top to become crisp.

Mustard ketchup or chili sauce may be added when the beans are nearly done. Reduce salt, if pork is very salty.

United States Army Engineers Have Created Air Field At Bermuda

Many remarkable achievements have been made in the reclamation of lands from marshes, rivers and the sea, and one of the most interesting of the present war is the airfield created by United States Army Engineers at Bermuda.

Named for one of its planners, Kinsley airfield adjoins Port Bell, one of the defenses of the island, and it was literally built up from the bottom of the sea. Where 18 months ago there was just the clear water of Bermuda, there is now one of the most up-to-date airfields that air services could wish for. Millions of cubic yards of mud were dumped into the area by dredgers until there was sufficient top surface on which to lay out runways and erect buildings that by any modern standard would be called impressive.

Port Bell has undergone extensive modernization at the hands of the Americans who hold the land on a 99 years' lease from Britain. One of the roads is to be named Andrews in memory of General Frank M. Andrews who was killed not long ago in an air crash in Iceland, and another is to be Fox road in memory of one of the men who had refused fabulous offers from wealthy Americans who wished to build homes there. But he gave up his palatial home and the land as a contribution to winning the war, saying that if it was the King's wish he would be glad to do so. His last lesson after war was attributed to a broken heart.—St. Thomas Times-Journal.

POST-WAR PLANS

Many cities in Great Britain, among them Birmingham, Coventry, York and London, are already planning for post-war buildings.

"Planning" is the right word, for no longer are builders allowed to build haphazardly. The re-building of the cities is being controlled, and York, for example, is trying to determine in advance whether to plan for a population of 50,000, 100,000 or 150,000.

Bombs in general use by the R.A.F. in 1940 weighed 500 pounds. By March, 1942, bombs weighing 4,000 pounds were used and by September, 1942, we were dropping bombs weighing 8,000 pounds.

Some Farm Tools
To Be Eliminated

Ottawa.... although a recent order of the War-time Prices and Trade Board has eliminated 140 from the total of 357 types of farm hand forks, hand hand hoes, hoes and hand cultivators, there are still 200 items which are to be manufactured.

The Board measure is designed to standardize and simplify manufacture of this equipment to conserve steel for war purposes. Essential items are all being retained, officials state, and quality will not be allowed to suffer.

Dobbin's Hair Has War Use

Ottawa.... Although a recent order of the
Any farmer whose son flies with the airforce over Germany, won't think the request to save combings from the manes and tails of his horses too unusual.
Hair from the mane of the horse is used for shock pads for army tanks, cushions for army vehicles.
Hair from the tail makes brushes to clean guns,
clean the wings of bombers, fighters and transport planes. And there is a great need, in Canada for horses' hair for these purposes.

If the farmer has two bags at hand, and can drop the combings from the mane in one bag, and from the tail in another, he will be contributing to the effort to keep the wings of the airforce free and flying.
